CHRISTMAS KIDDIES SEE PUNCH AND JUDY SHOW

The smaller the stage the greater the activity. Punch and Judy, as presented for the children of Carmel at Rem's Studio Christmas day, was given by its adult actors on what was undoubtedly the smallest little theatre stage in the state. And when dramatic action reached its height in the scene where a mob of three men fell upon poor Punch, the stage was indeed a thing full of arms and elbows. Ask any of the actors.

But to the large and excited audience the mild discomforts of the actors were as nothing. The result was what counted, and result was indeed had. Following which, refreshments were attacked and very successfully destroyed.

What if Punch whacked Judy too hard on the head with a slapstick when she lifted her head for a final protest at his cruelty? What if The Devil were told to get right out of his painstakingly applied outfit and whip into that of The Officer and then back into the Devil's again on half-minute's notice? What if one member of the cast didn't appear and was then found to have come down with the measles and the rest of the cast rushed to mirorrs to investigate faces for the fearful spots of sickness? The show went over and even the most exacting child had an hour of direct-appeal amusement, whether in the way of a show or something to eat, and here again result was the thing.

Cast was something like this, including last-instant changes and emergency shifts: Punch, Winsor Josselyn; Judy, Mary Marble; Servant, Blind Man, Jack Ketch, etc., Talbert Josselyn; Devil, Ray Woodward; Doctor, Officer, etc., Rem Remsen; Pretty Poll, Tony Wells. Music by Dorothy Woodward; Bob and Virginia Stanton read the lines; Rhoda Johnson and Kitty Wilkenson did the costumes; John Bartlett, set and Ray Woodward on the set and the properties, especially the durable slapsticks.

Thus did Carmel present its Christmas Punch and Judy show.

THE CHIEF COULDN'T FIND ANY XMAS CHEER

"I don't think there was a bit of booze in Carmel during Christmas," said Chief of Police Gus Englund this week. "At least no one under the influence of liquor made themselves obnoxious and no complaints of disorderly conduct were reported."

"Carmel is a good town," Gus reiterated reflectively. "There are no gambling houses, pool halls, vice dens, nor houses of prostitution, and the last bootlegger here was permanently discouraged by a heavy sentence."

Carmel was rather quiet; the natural exuberance of the Christmas spirit had to be confined within the home walls due to a steady downpour of rain the night before and well throughout the afternoon of Christmas.

CONVICT CAMPS ON STATE HIGHWAY

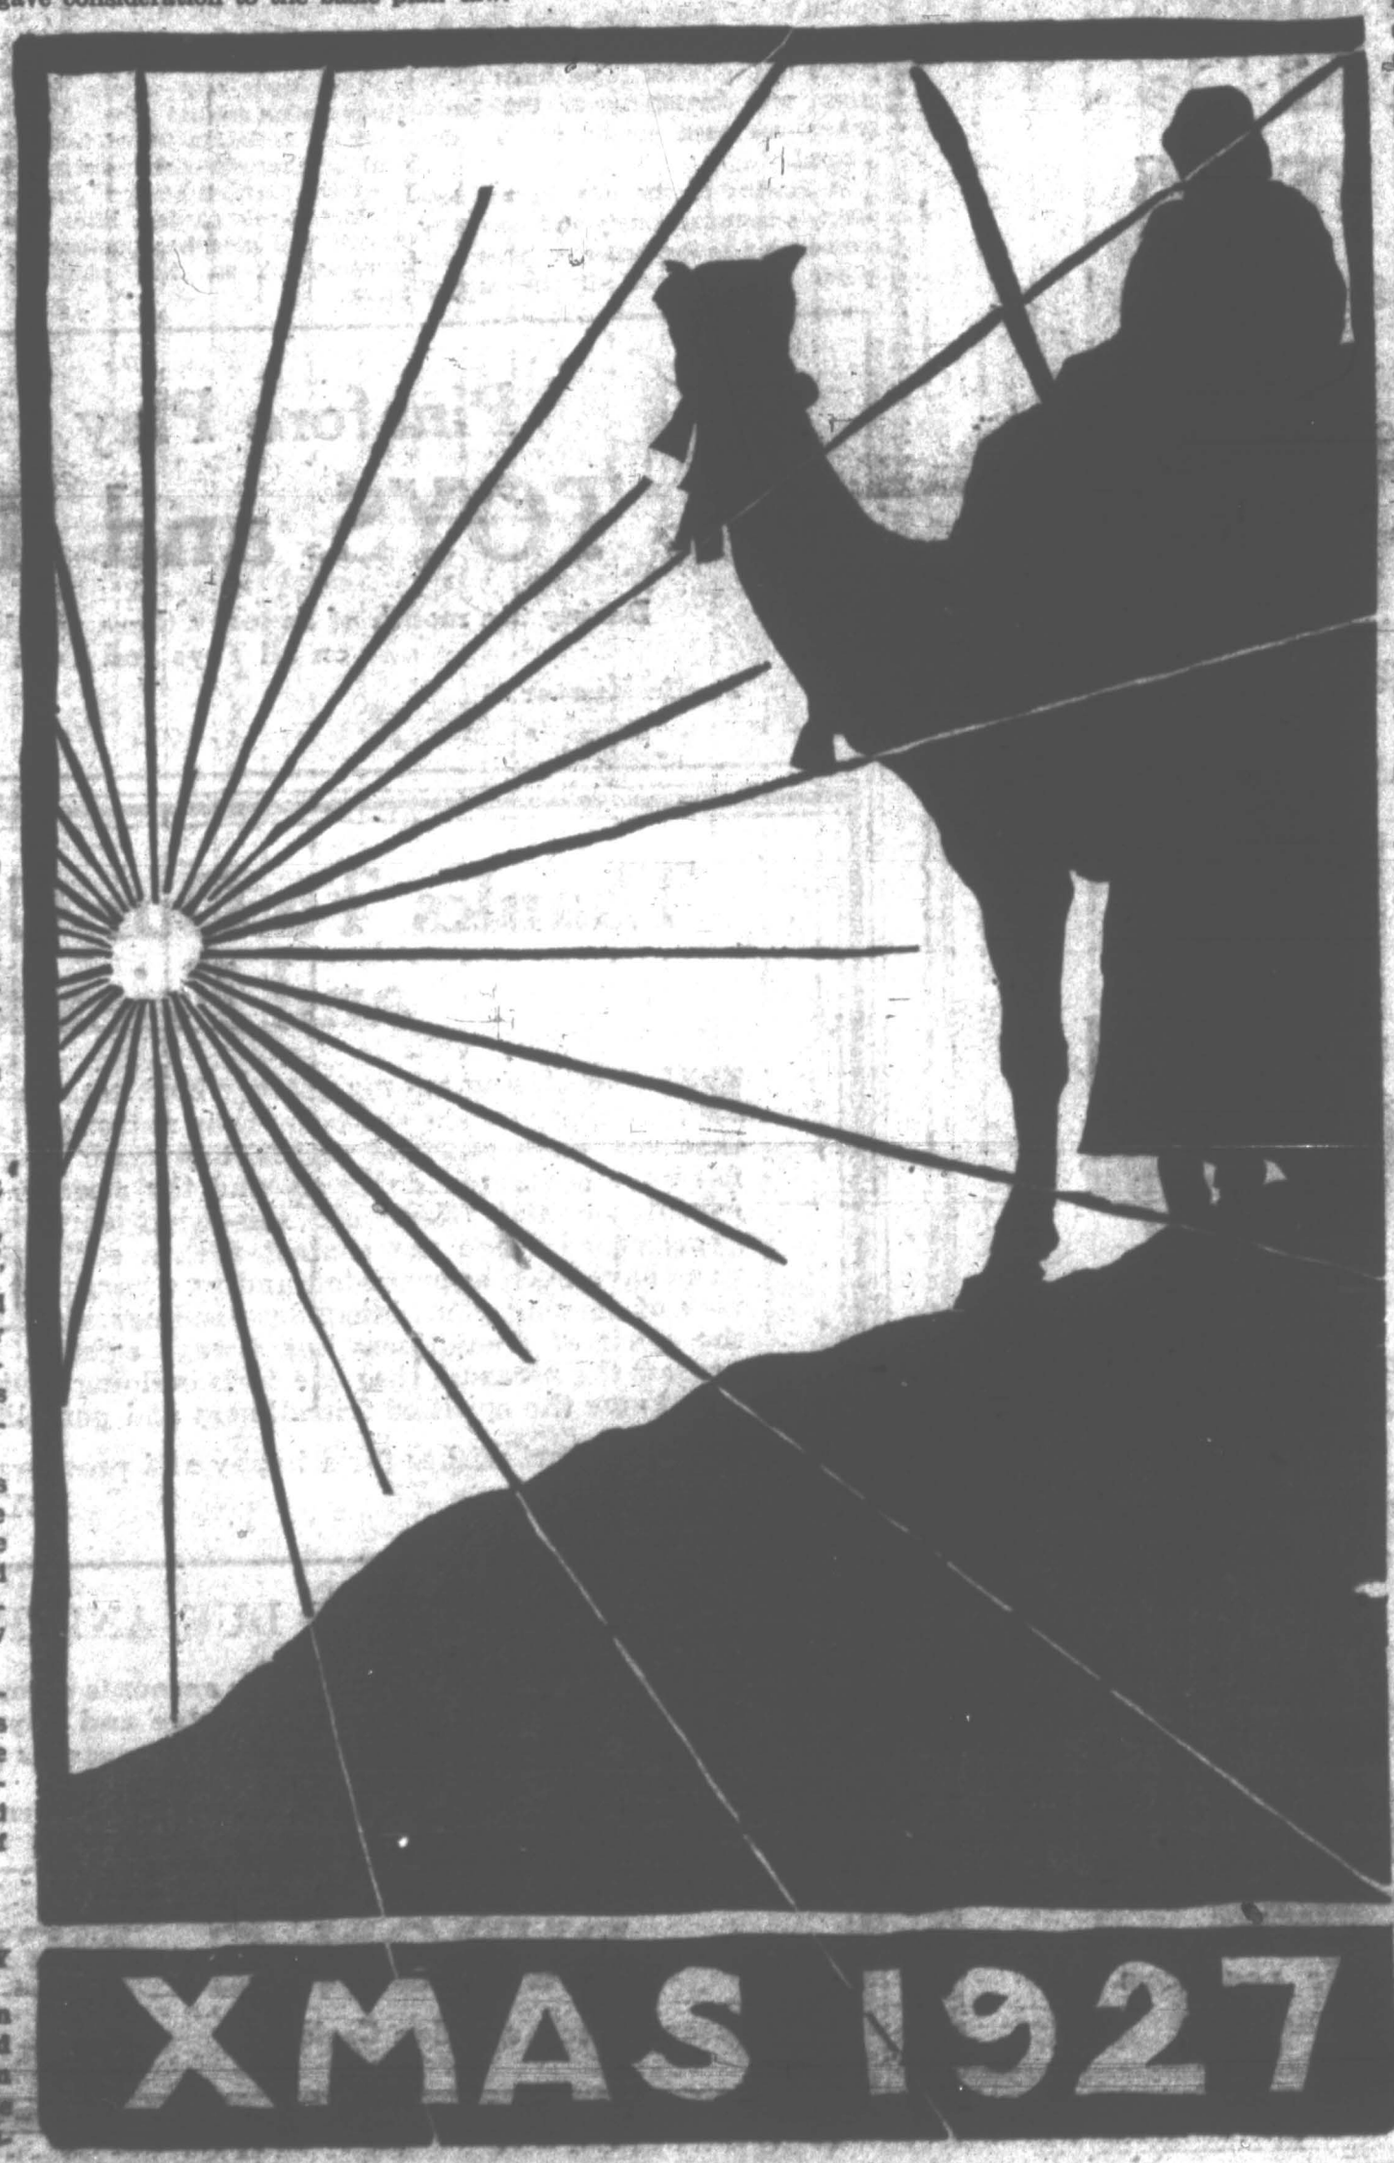
Five new prison road construction camps are soon to be constructed along the stretch of highway from Carmel to Cambria, and these camps will accommodate 800 convicts, thus relieveing congestion at San Quentin, which now has the largest number of inmates of any time in its history.

The stretch of road, part of which is already under construction, is part of the long talked of highway that will follow actually the ocean's edge from San Francisco to Los Angeles. The portion from Carmel to Cambria is approximately ninety miles in length and constitutes the major link in the chain.

FUTURE SUBDIVISIONS CONSIDERED BY BOARD

The City Planning Commission met last Wednesday evening and gave consideration to the basic plan for subdivisions in the territory covered by their authority—Carmel city, and three miles outside its limit lines. Mrs. H. S. Nye, chairman, called the meeting to order, with Mrs. Edward A. Kluegel, secretary; the other members present were P. B. Wright, Paul Flanders, John B. Jordan, H. D. Severence, and Argyll Campbell, with Councilmen Larouette, Wood and Dennis, sitting in.

Matters of such detail as the width of streets in future subdivisions, the minimum size of lots, the method of approving maps in the regulations to govern subdividing were discussed, but definite action was delayed for the meeting in January when Consultant Charles H. Cheney can be present. Then, after the commission agrees upon the rules, a public hearing must be had, and objections considered before the plan may be passed into law.



Delayed by Storm Santa Comes to Carmel Monday

Carmel's great Christmas tree, tapering to a height of 50 feet or more, spangled with lights, dangling with bright figures, and swathed in tinsel, looked down upon a joyous throng of Christmas celebrants last Monday night on the plaza at Ocean and Junipero.

Young and old, fathers and mothers with children in hand, youngsters guiding their parents eagerly, informed by church and school bells, a clear-voiced trumpet, summoned by the mellow tones of the xylophone, responded with the singing of the carols, merry laughter, and an exchange of cheerful greetings.

It was the second annual Christmas Tree celebration, perhaps no larger than the previous one, but a demonstration as appreciative as any before. Notwithstanding the postponement of the event from Saturday night to Monday night and the consequent inconvenience and disappointment it brought with it, word passed slowly around and the lure of a starry night drew the youngsters out from all Carmel village.

Santa Claus was there, a large expansive Santa Claus, passing out the candy-filled cornucopias—300 of them, giving away balloons—300 of them too. The cornucopias were made by the girl scouts. The candy and balloons were donated by Santa Claus Incorporated—the stockholders, citizens of Carmel—and the whole affair was handled by the Carmel Parent Teachers Association.

Personal visits were made to the homes of children who had no Santa Claus where toys were left and other good things to give them a semblance of Christmas.

The carol singing was declared the best ever heard here. The singers knew the carols better this time and their rehearsal made for greater harmony. The children's orchestra especially deserves commendation. Mrs. H. F. Dickinson was director of the orchestra which included six pieces—two violins, cello, clarinet, saxophone, and xylophone. Miss Pauline Newman rehearsed the children at school in the singing of the carols while Mrs. Harry Sheppard rehearsed children and grown-ups in the way carols should be sung. Fenton Foster directed the singing of the carols.

The Christmas Tree celebration was in charge of the Parent-Teachers' Association. Miss Frances Burpee took personal charge of the arrangements.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED OF CARMEL YOUNG WOMAN

Mrs. Lydia A. Burpee of Bellingham, Washington, announces the engagement of her daughter, Margaret Burpee, of Carmel, to Richard King Clarke of Seattle, the son of Mrs. Caroline F. Clarke.

Both Miss Burpee and Mr. Clarke are graduates of the University of Washington, where she was a member of the Delta Zeta Sorority and Mortar Board, and he was affiliated with the Sigma Chi Fraternity and the Oval club.

The wedding will take place at Bellingham in the early summer. Miss Margaret Burpee has lived in Carmel, with her sister Frances Burpee, and has been connected with the Carmel Realty Co. She has many friends here.

STANFORD GALLERY TO SHOW WORK OF CARMEL ARTISTS

Miss E. Grace Ward and Edith Ward Hunt of Carmel are to give a joint exhibition of their paintings at the Stanford Gallery for two weeks beginning January 22.

Miss Ward will show both water colors and oils. Among other interesting pieces, Mrs. Hunt will exhibit some mural hangings painted on unfilled canvas and silk.

Stanley Wood has a group of water colors in the International Water Color Exhibition which is being shown in the Legion of Honor Building in San Francisco at present. The exhibit left Chicago in March.

HUNTING LICENSES TO BE TWO DOLLARS, 1928-1929

Fishing and hunting licenses will go up in price on January 2. As a result of the law adopted at the last session of the legislature, hunters and anglers will pay $2 each for permits to hunt or fish, starting with the new year.

The great increase of hunters and anglers and the necessity for the building up of the game and fish by the Division of Fish and Game of the Bureau of Natural Resources has made additional revenue a vital need, but with the increased fees that will start coming in after 1928 is ushered in, great strides are possible and the carrying out of the division's program of conservation, protection and propagation will be assured.

California's population is increasing at such a rapid rate and the call of the outdoors is being heeded to such a great extent, that the State must take action to provide sport for this rapidly growing horde of hunters, anglers and out-door lovers that are being attracted to California.

With a new game farm in prospect, to be located in southern California, and with the present farm at Yountville functioning even more efficiently than during the past two years, it is only a question of time until the cover of the State is well stocked with that great game bird, the ring necked pheasant. This bird, which has been liberally distributed during the past two years, is making fine progress.

This of course presents a new problem of protection, and the division must have an increased force to look after these birds while they are developing to the point where an open season can be declared.

A feature of the new license law that is being seriously and carefully considered is the provision that sets aside one-third of all the money received from the sale of hunting licenses for the purchase, lease or rental, and the development, improvement, maintenance and administration of land to be used for game refuges and public shooting grounds. With this in mind, the Fish and Game commissioners are looking forward to an extremely busy year.

Thanks To Our Customers and Friends

BEFORE closing out my grocery business, I want to take this means of thanking you sincerely for your patronage and good will. I believe that you have received satisfaction from trading here or you would not have continued doing so, and the reward for having earned your confidence and friendship somewhat compensates for the regret I experienced when the contact with a customer ceases. Your suggestions have been appreciated and as a result we were placed in a better way of serving you. Misunderstandings sometimes have crept up but the spirit of friendliness has always existed. And once more let me express the pleasure that one feels in doing business with you in Carmel who know the spirit of friendliness and geniality.

With best wishes for a happy and prosperous new year.

THAT WELL KNOWN LOCAL CRITERION ANSWERS CRITICS

"Be sure your own appearance is harmonious, well-fitting, and picturesque before you stand in front of the new library and try to pick out its flaws," is the whimsical edict issued this week by a well-known local criterion who is tired of hearing adverse criticisms of the new edifice from people "who know nothing about architecture."

"Because," says the wk. local criterion, "such remarks are apt to show indiscretion and a lack of differentiation. The design and architecture of the new library is based upon tradition, precedent, and a careful blending of the Italian and Spanish in style. Furthermore, the colors were scientifically chosen, no hit-and-miss proposition at all."

Now will you be quiet! No more of these remarks about the "incongruity", about the "jarring of the sensibilities," and about "certain monstrosities" of the new building.

If these remarks persist, however, somebody will have to dig up the pedigree papers and show that the new library is descended from a long line of noble, stately, and imposing heirs.

Bernard Maybeck, the famous exposition architect, who designed the Palace of Fine Arts, the lone exposition building that was left standing, knows the family tree of the building, and if any criticism has been directed at him he has not dignified it with a defense.

Maybeck spent some time in Italy where the precedent for this building was uncovered. There is precedent, it is said, for the tile below the windows and for the single column supporting the roof that juts out over the entrance and both come from a certain crudity of building that is authentic in itself if old architectural designs are followed.

"At any rate, won't one column support a roof as well as two and won't the jutting roof shed the rain better than no roof at all," seems to be sound logic that comes from another quarter.

The impertinent remarks directed at the new structure seem to be pertinent to put in here at the present time for the library is virtually completed.

Linoleum has been laid the past week and lighting fixtures have been chosen. W. S. Hambridge and L. A. Hobbs, head of the lighting department of the Pacific Gas and Electric Co., came down personally to place the lighting fixtures scientifically and to determine the amount of light necessary for the well-being of the eyes. The lighting fixtures were designed and chosen by Maybeck, the architect. The placing of them and the power of the lights were left to the two P. G. and E. experts.

After the new library building itself has been finished, a garden will be set out in front, to be surrounded by a low stone wall about 12 to 15 inches in height.

It is expected when all is completed that all Carmel will be proud of it; that the new edifice will gradually blend into its surroundings; and that it will be unlike any other library anywhere and for that reason unique and original in itself.

And after all the value of a library is sometimes calculated in the number of volumes that the said library contains. And after it is completed and opened, possibly the severe critics would be better inside looking out than outside looking in.

HANDLED MORE MAIL THAN EVER BEFORE

During the Christmas rush the local post office handled more mail than ever before and with much greater facility, according to Miss Stella Vincent, postmistress.

Although the exact figures are lacking, the outgoing and incoming mail exceeded by far any other previous amount coming at this time of the year.

Mail was dispatched with greater ease which was due to the cooperation of the public in complying with the request to "mail early." Naturally, however, the greatest volume, mostly outgoing mail, was handled on the 22nd and 23rd.

Although the mail handled at the local post office exceeds that of Monterey some times during the year, Christmas mail was below that of our contiguous community.

CARS COLLIDE AND TWO PEOPLE HURT

Mrs. Anna Kitchen, proprietor of Carmel Inn, and her son, Virgil were slightly injured last Monday when their car collided with another machine near Bradley.

Mrs. Kitchen sustained a wrenched knee and cuts on the forehead. Her son received a sprained wrist. Both are recuperating at their home.

Mrs. Kitchen and her son were returning from San Miguel, where they spent their Christmas vacation. A machine parked on the side of the road was the cause of the collision. Mrs. Kitchen's car and another machine were approaching the parked car at the same rate, and finding a scarcity of room to pass, unavoidably crashed into each other.

DIVINE WORSHIP

New Years will be observed in the Community church Sunday at eleven. Rev. I. M. Terwilliger will preach an appropriate sermon entitled "It's Moving Time!" Sunday school at 10 a.m. Epworth League at 6:30 pm. The church is the pulse of national righteousness. Christianity is the fundamental difference between civilization and savagery. Start the New Year with Divine Worship.

SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY IS CELEBRATED

A birthday dinner for R. H. Hoagland, an old resident of Carmel, was given this week by Mrs. Anna Kitchen at the Carmel Inn. It was the seventieth birthday of the guest of honor, who is the brother of Miss Saidee Van Brower, also of Carmel.

BUDGET PLAN FOR ART WORKS OPENS WITH GOOD PROMISE

Wasn't it old Archimedes that said, "give me leverage and I'll move the world"?

Nowadays if he were alive he'd probably say, "give me time and I'll buy the world," a statement that would be regarded as more or less trite.

For now beside the proposed sale of trans-Atlantic voyages on the installment plan you can actually buy oil paintings, water color paintings, drawings, etchings, monotypes, lithographs, and small sculptures on the budget plan. And by such artists as John O'Shea, Theodore Criley, William Watts, Stanley Wood, George Seideneck, Armin Hansen, Albert Barrows, Lucy V. Pierce, M. De Neale Morgan, and a host of others widely known throughout the west. Mesrs. Gensler and Lee, two well known San Francisco merchants and art patrons, are sponsoring the plan through the East West Gallery which is now holding an exhibition to try out the idea. They will pay the artist whose work is sold in the gallery in full in thirty days after the sale. Aside from this they will meet all expenses such as transportation, insurance, handling of accounts, establishing credits, making collections, advertising in newspapers and magazines, and mailing announcements to about 10,000 persons. Beside the usual commission of 25 per cent they will charge ten per cent more than the average dealer because they are assuming the risks and doing the advertising.

The idea of selling pictures on the easy payment plan is not new among the artists themselves. There are some who offer their friends the extended budget plan. But the assumption of all the risks by a businesslike organization with the idea of selling pictures to persons of moderate income is new.

The exhibit of the East West Gallery, which is held in the San Francisco Women's Building, has had the largest daily attendance ever recorded in a San Francisco gallery. And with the inauguration of the easy payment plan the sales have been more numerous and more important than at any time during the same period in a gallery of the same type. This is an indication of the development of an important market for western art work on the coast, and possibly of art in general on this side of the continent.

WHAT OF INTEREST IN THE MAGAZINES?

Some of the writings in current magazines by present or former Carmel authors, as listed at the Seven Arts magazine department, are: "Things As They Are," by John Fleming Wilson in the December Golden Book; "Macaire," by Robert Louis Stevenson in December Golden Book; "Since the Beans Were Spilled," by Samuel G. Blythe in Dec. 3rd Saturday Evening Post; "Failure in Heaven," by Lawrence S. Morris, in November 30th New Republic; "Modernism in Painting," by Hamilton Wolf, in December Argus; "Water Colors" by Stanley Wood, in December Argus; "Why Not Pick a Good One," by Samuel G. Blythe in December 24th Saturday Evening Post; "The Man On the Black Horse," by Frederick Bechdolt, in December McClure's; and "The Man Who Knew Coolidge," by Sinclair Lewis, in December American Mercury.

The November and December issues of the Overland Monthly were dedicated to an appreciation of George Sterling. Among the Carmel authors who contributed to the estimation of the man were: Mary Austin, James Hopper, Robinson Jeffers, Clarkson Crane, Upton Sinclair, Herbert Heron, Vernon Kellogg, and Johan Hagemeyer.

ART ASSOCIATION PLANS PUBLIC RECEPTION

Artists are requested to bring work intended for the January and February Exhibition to the Gallery on the afternoons of January third and fourth. Those having work in the present exhibit are requested to remove it the same afternoons.

A public reception is bieng planned for Saturday afternoon, January 7th, from 2 to 6 o'clock, and all are cordially invited.

The lecture by Hamilton Wolf, "Vagabonding in the South Seas," has been postponed for the present.

AMONG THE ARTISTS

Holman Day is writing a series of twelve stories, the first of which have already appeared, for Youth's Companion, the boys' magazine now owned by the Atlantic Monthly.

Day, who was formerly a motion picture producer and director, is revealing the inside workings of the movies through these humorous stories of a country boy's rise in the films. Some of the titles that suggest the nature of the stories are "Jazzing Lochinvar" and "Buffalo, the Bear, Gets a Role."

M. De Neale Morgan will exhibit her works at two one-man shows early next year. She will exhibit at the Stanford Gallery from Jan. 20 to 31 and at Sacramento at the Crocker Gallery for a fortnight beginning April 16th. The latter exhibition is conducted by the Kingsley Art Club.

This artist is also planning to send a painting to the Pasadena Art Institute exhibit, which is open to all artists residing in California, to be held from Jan. 6 to 31st.

Gladys Vander Roest will leave Carmel on the tenth of January for Pasadena where she will work with Gilmour Brown in the Pasadena Community Players. She will have a part immediately upon arriving there.

Franz Ludwig's Musical Digest

By Thomas Vincent Cator

Some interesting editorial comment was recently made in one of America's important magazines relative to musical progress on the Pacific coast. Here is some of it:

"San Francisco always has been a cosmopolitan city. Its trend in a cultural direction is no recent thing. There was no surprise, therefore, to find a discriminating audience present at the opening concert by the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. Alfred Hertz had an ovation when he appeared on the Curran Theatre stage, and enough flowers to start a shop.

"This is a splendid body of men, and Hertz is a sound musician. I liked his program and its interpretation. Only occasionally was there too much tone. A more repressed conductor than he was at the New York Metropolitan Opera House, Hertz has gained on his symphonic side. When San Francisco builds a proper auditorium in which to house its orchestra it can be heard to the advantage it deserves.

"I reached that city too late to hear its performance by the San Francisco Opera Company, but the same artists and the same repertoire were presented later in Los Angeles. The San Francisco season was financially satisfactory.

"As regards Los Angeles, progress is pushing it rapidly along in music. The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra is largely responsible. This year it has a new conductor in Georg Schneevoigt, who succeeds the late Walter Henry Rothwell. If Schneevoigt continues as he has begun it will put a feather in the cap of William A. Clark, Jr., the orchestra's founder, president and guarantor.

"I heard two performances of the opening program. Both audiences were demonstrative, and another indication of Schneevoigt's instantaneous popularity was evinced in the jump of the season ticket sale. The Finnish leader put a deal of 'expressiveness' and change of tempo into his reading of the Brahms first symphony; rather more than most other conductors provide. His Die Meistersinger overture, De Falla's Three Cornered Hat, and the Respigi Fountains of Rome pleased me to a great extent.

"Some of the Los Angeles Opera Company's performances touched a satisfying standard. There was a truly stunning Turandot, with Anne Roselle, Armand Tokatyan, Enzo Pinza carrying off the individual honors, and (so I was reliably informed, for I missed them) creditable representations of Tristan und Isolde, in which Elsa Alsen, Kathryn Meisle, Rudolph Laubenthal and Pasquale Amato took part; La Cena delle Beffe, with Tokatyan and Laurence Tibbett; and Trovatore, in which Miss Meisle again distinguished herself in a cast which included Giovanni Martinelli.

"Developing such an institution as this one which is being fostered by the joint companies requires time, patience, and open-mindedness. A diversity of opinion is only natural. All that is needed is a broad viewpoint, and a realization that the goal sought for is the good of opera on the Pacific slope. Since this is the prevailing attitude, I am optimistic over the outcome of this unified project."

BRICK MORSE'S COLLEGIANS COME TO GOLDEN BOUGH

It will be an unique and rollicking evening at the Theatre of the Golden Bough, Friday, January 6, when Brick Morse's Collegians of the University of California appear in Carmel.

Brick Morse's Collegians are entering upon their thirty-third season before the public. Under their present name the college boys toured the Northwest and Canada this last summer, meeting with packed houses and enthusiasm everywhere.

Under the name of the University of California Glee club, Brick Morse has taken his singers to the Orient on three occasions. Three successful tours of Europe are also numbered among the Collegian's achievements.

The Collegians offer a different type of program from the ordinary college glee club. The college songs and glees are there to be sure, sung by a chorus of nineteen voices, but interspersed are the vaudeville acts which lend dspice to the program and have made the Collegians famous all over the world.

No group of colleke enfertainers in America has such a record of acheivement as have the Brick Morse Collegians. All of the entertainments presented by this famous organization are under the personal supervision of Mr. Morse.

The Brick Morse Collegians has, during its various summer and winter tours, visited nearly every part o fthe globe. They have sung and danced before royalty and critics in Japan, China, Norway, Sweden, France, Germany, Italy, England and many other countries, being greeted with the most flattering receptions everywhere.

One of their greatest triumphs was in Edmborough years ago. Their success was tremendous and critics stated that enever had they seen such enthusiasm as that displayed by the Edmbofough people, who packed the big auditorium that night. In Norway, also their success was great.

The Christiania "Tidens Tegn" says the singing of the California Collegians was a real treat and their vaudeville acts were highly entertaining."

Of the club's appearance on Keith's vaudeville circuit the Cleveland Times says: "The Brick Morse Collegians made a splendid appearance with their choruses, quartets, eccentric dances and comic songs."

"U. C. must stand for unqualified class." Manila Bulletin.

The British audience at Hong Kong gave the club a wonderful welcome. The South China Post says: "It was a great night—an extraordinarily good program."

Tiny Tales of Vital Import

The Abalone League and the new Ford have done more to unite Carmel's warring factions than any other four influences that have come to hit the Peninsula since Del Monte burned.

Snow was observed on the peaks of the Santa Lucia Mountains last week. Many motored up Sunday to enjoy the sight.

Dora Hagemeyer's young son has the eye of a real collector. He found a handleless cup the other day in his back yard, and "took it up to Miss Polak's 'cause it was a antique," bless his heart.

Dick Johnson, sack over shoulder, went mushroom hunting one day, and much to his young daughter, Gail's amazement, "didn't take a gun."

Last week a mother in Carmel called her son in the dead of night, all the way from here to northern Quebec. She reports that all he could say was "Well, Well, Well" and she hasn't the faintest idea what she said, but she remembers going to bed and crying into her pillow the rest of the night. It took three quarters of an hour to get the connection, and she reports that it was so good, and that all the operators were so nice that she had a real heart throb out of the event, entirely aside from the joy of hearing her boy's voice, and the cold he had in his head. "He always has a cold this time of year. It seemed so real, somehow." There's nothing blase about mothers, thank God!

The report is out, and it seems to be correct, that Wm. Fox will make a picture here in Carmel in January featuring Wm. Farnum and Earl Foxe. They will do Don Byrne's "Hangman House" and will use the Highlands because it has been discovered that it is a replica of the coast of Donegal, where the Byrne plot is laid.

It has been suggested that the "Box Rent Due" cards so cheerfully given gratis each quarter to box holders at the local Post Office, be made bright red or navy blue or something, so that poor little girls won't stand in line for at least an hour waiting for a package and getting a look. The other day a long line of restless package seekers heard a wail at the top of the line and there they saw Sally, reading her card for the first time, though she had held it in her hot little hand for the best part of an hour, she claims. "Box Rent Due" is an awful blow when you had been expecting at least a box of good chocolates, and Sally expressed herself in good American.

STAGE TRIUMPH "SEVENTH HEAVEN" AT GOLDEN STATE THEATRE

Even the most astonishing of all the arts, the photodrama, where any miracle is possible, it is not often that two stars flame into existence in the same picture. In fact, it had never occured until the production of the film version of Austin Strong's play "7th Heaven." There had been rumors before its premiere in Los Angeles that there was a surprise in store for the first audience who would witness this production. Rumors that the work of the two leading characters was of an unusual nature. But every big production is press-agented in a similar manner and the blase critics who came to see the first showing had no greater hope than that they would not be bored too much.

Then, as they sat there the miracle came to pass. On the screen before their eyes they saw what the most optimistic of critics does not expect to witness more than once in a life-time, the coming into being of two new stars. For, from the first scene revealing Charles Farrell in the role of Chico, plying his trade in a Paris sewer, and to the next, showing the trembling Janet Gaynor in the part of Diane, lifting supplicating hands to her drink-mad sister, and until the last glorious moment when the two are reunited after a long separation, in their heaven of a Paris garret, they mesmerized their audience with the portrayal of their roles.

Nothing like it had ever been seen before, proclaimed reviewers in their papers the next day. They vied with each other to find adjectives with which to describe the emotional heights to which they had been carried by these young players.

Then came the New York premiere at the Sam Harris Theatre, and again a group of what are probably the most "hard-boiled" critics in the world, who came, thinking to find something on which to exercise their wit and amuse their readers, sat spellbound throughout the showing and then wrote of the picture and its two suddenly discovered stars as they had never written before.

"The picture grips you" proclaimed Mordaunt of the New York Sun. "It's a cinema symphony" announced Cofax of the Graphic. "A vehicle of triumph for those two newcomers, Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell," he continued. "One was transported to Seventh Heaven by the acting of these two," said the Evening Journal. "They leave no moment free from episode that sweeps the heart 'twixt cheers and tears" cried Crulkshank in the New York Morning Telegram. "Janet Gaynor is gorgeous. Never have we seen more touchingly beautiful love scenes," was the decision of the New York Herald Tribune.

And so these two comparatively unknown youngsters, Miss Gaynor is only nineteen and Charles Farrell but a few years older, suddenly found themselves in the highest firmament of filmdom. "7th Heaven" was directed by Frank Borzage, the director of "Humoresque," which until the making of "7th Heaven" was considered his masterpiece. But with his later production he has achieved a beauty of perfection that is probably unequaled by any other motion picture production.

The production will have a three day showing at the Golden State Theatre in Monterey, starting with Monday, January 2nd.

NEW MODERN KITCHEN AT HIGHLANDS INN

Highland's Inn will have one of the most modern and efficient units in California in the way of a service and culinary department when their new addition is built and extensive remodeling is completed on their service wing which is now under way.

The estimated cost of this construction work is $25,000 and M. J. Murphy, the builder, expects to have the new addition completed by February 15th when the Inn opens.

When work is finished the Inn will have an incinerating plant, a refrigerating plant, a meat house, several storage rooms, ventilators over the ovens and dish washing basin, a private dining room, a servant's dining room, and a whole floor in the service wing over to the servant's quarters.

The addition is being made on the service wing and after completion it will measure 38 by 36 feet, providing ample space for an efficient arrangement of all cooking and serving apparatus.

The basement will be made fireproof and an incinerator will be installed that will have an opening in the kitchen as well as on the outside of the building, eliminating much inefficiency.

The second floor of the service wing will provide quarters for servants, divided into small rooms with closets adjoining. Bath tubs, showers, and lavatories will all be accessible on this floor. A storage room is also included.

The third floor, on the level of the dining room, will provide a private dining room in the new addition and will give an abundant space in the kitchen and serving rooms. A servant's dining room will also be added. Extensive alterations will take place in the enlarged kitchen. Galvanized hoods will be placed over the ovens and dish washing basins. An additional oven will be built into the brick walls.

ALL AROUND TOWN

Dudley T. Ross, former reporter on the Peninsula Herald, is spending a few days with his friend, Charles Benedict, here. Ross is now engaged in syndicate news writing in Palo Alto.

Thora Dangaard, Chairman of the Danish National Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, an organization of 15,000 members, is on a lecture tour through this country, and will be in Carmel next week. The local branch of the L. I. L. hopes to secure her as speaker at their January meeting.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles T. Sweeney of Medford, Oregon, are in Carmel looking up old friends and into the condition of their property here.

Mr. George Gordon Moore is receiving the sympathy of his friends while he is recuperating from injuries received in a recent accident on the polo field. The day after Mr. and Mrs. Moore returned from the East, Mr. Moore was playing polo on his own field on his ranch in the Carmel Valley, when his pony slipped and threw him. Mr. Moore's nose was broken and he was severely bruised.

One of the jolliest dinners on Christmas day, was that of the H. W. Askew family at their home on San Carlos and Fourth street. The house and table decorations were extremely attractive. Children, grand children, relatives and friends from Carmel and other places gathered around the festive board. Those who were present from Carmel were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Funchess and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Askew, Mr. and Mrs. William Askew, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Mylar and daughter from Laton, Birney W. Adams from Pacific Grove, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuthill from Peble Beach, David Askew from Santa Barbara, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Funchess from Hanford, Ruth C. Askew from Laton, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison W. Askew Sr. from [illegible].

The friends of Mrs. John Wiegold will regret to hear of her being confined to her bed for the past six months with a serious illness, which will soon follow with an operation. Mrs. Wiegold is at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Perry in Monterey.

Ida Mansfield Wilson of Carmel has as guests at her home, her son, Kenneth A. Wilson, his wife and little daughter, Virginia, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Rathacher all of San Francisco.

Marcelle Radgesky, with the Carmel Land Company, spent Christmas with her sister in Berkeley. Her sister is Elizabeth.

Mary Shallue is in Carmel rehearsing the leading feminine role of the next Carmel Players production, "Liliom."

Your friends want to know Carmel intimately. Take them to dinner at Sally's.—Adv.

1927 . . . It Seems Carmel's Fat

IN RETROSPECT

This is the last number of the year. Also, we have been editor of the paper just a little more than a year. Let's have a sort of sizing up of things in the interval.

First, we're glad we didn't make any announcement promises when we took hold of the paper. That business of reading over hopeful assurances, subsequently blasted by the frosts of cold facts, would be too discouraging. But how many things have we attempted that have soured on our hands! And how slowly move those other projects which have been accepted and put into effect!

Lots of editorial loose strings left dangling, we ruefully admit. Got to knot 'em tighter in the future. Trees, f'rinstance. Thousands have come down in Carmel since we took on the Pine Cone, and perhaps a score have been planted on city rights of way. Does that look like editorial efficiency? We blush with shame. But if we were a member of the City Council, we'd be as red in the face as a December sunset over that record.

Again, that increase in water rates. We began scrapping with the Monterey County Water Works a year ago, and we've got a notice on our desk right now that an adjourned hearing in the matter will be held by Railroad Commissioner Louttit some day next month. A full year of hearings. Of course, the delay hasn't been entirely against the consumer of water, for the increase asked for hasn't been granted yet. But is shows how slowly things move.

When we started that fight, we hadn't a friend in the world. We were the only paper on the peninsula that took it up, and we were told that the fight was lost before it was begun; that the matter would be determined upon technical grounds, settled by the cold figures of engineers and financial men, and the question of Carmel's flower-beds would never get into court. But we told the Commissioner about our flower garden, and he listened to us. And before many months, people in Monterey and in Pacific Grove, and the newspapers, were talking flowers instead of figures, and urging cheaper water for the sake of beauty.

We wanted Block 69 made into a children's playground a year ago. So do we now, though we are not so insistent as we were. Because Carmel has achieved—and we point with pride to the Pine Cone's early advocacy of it—a planning scheme being made by an expert in planning, we await his advice on Block 69 with composure. Somehow it will be made to fit into the general scheme, and then we may expect it to look less like the wrath of God, and more humanly possible.

The news and feature columns of the Pine Cone through 1927 have been pretty bumpy and irregular, but on the whole fair to middling. The idea that all news must have a local angle, and that no feature should get so distant from Carmel that one couldn't smell the kelp in the bay has restricted us as a newspaper. However, we believe it is a good policy for this village, and we'll continue that road, even though a dearth of news happenings here sometimes leaves us rather up in the air.

We come now to the life-blood—advertising. We want to talk with you quite frankly about that. This number, and quite a few back numbers during the Holiday season, have been fairly crowded with advertisements. But we promise not to get purse-proud or high-hat over it. There were other months when . . .

At the best, there's none too much money conducting a weekly village pap It takes the cooperation of the whole to to make it prosperous and independ Subscriptions and advertising are its me of revenue, and unless the village is w ing to show liberal support by subscrib and by advertising, it is bound to wit and look unkept. Carmel is entitled to very best newspaper that can be got out, but unless it is prepared to consi the paper on a broader basis than straight business proposition, it will have it.

It is the regular, every-week, all-t year advertiser who upholds and bu his town paper. The business man w says to himself, "I will insure with a p of my income that a good newspaper g out every week to build up the town, bu up its trade, and so advance my interest is the truly public spirited citizen. Th he gets his quid pro quo in direct retu is unimportant.

A last word, and that about subscr tions. Based on proportion of populati the Pine Cone is far in excess of its rig ful dues. A copy goes each week to o out of two of Carmel's population. M many of these are, of course, sent out town. Practically everyone in Carm reads the paper, and judged by the w we have had to jump the output of t press every few months, the limit has yet been reached. It means that the v lage is growing . . .

Oh, well! We can't stop it fr growing.

ONE THREAT CEASES TO BE

The legal ownership of Point Lobos h been definitely decided in favor of A. Allen, and the fear that the famous gro of cypresses at its point would be open to the public as a county park is pa When the Board of Supervisors, after l tening to opinions of its legal advisers, Di rict Attorney Warth, and of his t deputies, Argyll Campbell and The determined that an appeal from Jud Treat's decision would be useless, the m ter of adverse claim to the Allen prop ties was settled once for all.

There had been little or no enthusia for the proposition of making Point Lob a county park. When it was first sugge ed, and Supervisor Roberts offered t point to the American Legion for a mem ial, Carmel began to see the danger public usage of this beauty spot. At t very best it would mean the despoilati of the grove by picnickers, the erection unsightly buildings, and the danger of t trees being killed by too great congesti When the American Legion rejected t Supervisor's rather previous offer, a brea of relief went up from Carmel.

Again Carmel worried as their rep sentative in the Board of Supervis sought in the courts to show the county h ownership in the property. In a statem printed in the Pine Cone almost a y ago, on January 14, 1927, Dr. John L. Roberts said:

"The courts of the State of Califor will hand back to the people its rights, a when it does the Board of Supervisors Monterey County will manage this pu property; and they are capable, Editor, just as much and perhaps more than Mr. Allen. And they won't mak camp ground of it, as has been insinuat nor a rowdy gathering place, nor a dum ing ground for tin cans and waste pap The Board have no plans for turning over to the State now or at any time. can and will provide good, safe roads get into and around it, suitable and pro comfort stations, fire pits, tables, garb receptacles, water and numerous ot

CHANT OF A DESERT BRONCO

By VALENTINE PORTER

Whirl-wind, Whirl-wind,
Wind of the desert,
Sweeping from spaces
Onward to mountains,
Down in the washes,
Up to the high lands,
Sweeping the sage-brush,
Bending the mesquit!

Onward I go
As the wind of the desert,
Flying and chasing,
Sweeping and cutting.
Onward I go
To the land of the mesa,
The land of the boulders,
The land of high places.

Wind of the desert,
Chasing and sweeping!
Blow off the man-scent,
Blow off the dog-scent,
The scent of the stranger!
Wind of the desert,
Chase off the stranger!

The Spirit of Darkness,
The Spirit of Night-time
Awakes in the valleys,
Awakes in the mountains!
The call of the chin-dog
Wails in the desert.
The chin-dog howls.
And all is still.

With ghostly dancers in its misty spaces,

te To Grow Bigger and Better . . . 1928

comforts and facilities that don't exist under the management of Mr. Allen. And it will be free, as it was originally intended it should be—owned by the Public, maintained by the Public, and enjoyed by the Public."

That statement set thousands of people who had previously either endorsed public ownership of the point, or been neutral in the matter, against it. It visualized county ownership perfectly. And when the Superior Court so completely disagreed with Supervisor Roberts' contentions, and determined the suit against him, there was general relief.

Another danger confronts us, the neighbors of Point Lobos, and that is the newly appointed State Park Commission, and the determination of an organization of somewhat mythical character, terming itself the Point Lobos Association, to make the point part of the State Park system. State park or county park, the objection is the same. For the same reason that a velvet cut-pile Persian rug is not laid on the floor of the town hall, or a Kohinoor is not tossed to the public to play with, Point Lobos should not be made a park or playground for the people. It is too precious for its beauty and interest to be manhandled by the crowds.

YES, RIGHT ON OUR MAIN STREET

It is discouraging, maddening, and makes one question the sanity of his fellowmen when in the midst of an anti-billboard campaign, that has just begun to produce results—one that seems to meet with popular approval, and gets club endorsements, and all that—up goes a big board sign on the main highway into town, inside the city limits, in a residence district, and entirely contrary to the zoning ordinance.

A big, ugly yellow and blue advertising sign, reared on posts, against the fence line telling the public about somebody's gym toys and how to buy them. Behind the fence are samples of the advertised goods, and a telephone box to connect with the salesman. It may be that there's something in the arrangement that dodges the law which provides that no business may be conducted in this section or zone; otherwise Judge Fraser and Chief Englund wouldn't allow it for a minute; but there's certainly no decency in that awful sign.

For it counteracts everything done. What real estate man, seeing that, is going to worry about his quiet and more modest signs? What merchant who has littered up the highways with his hoardings will pay attention to Carmel protests, if Carmel permits this atrocity?

RAIN

It has come down pretty steadily this week. Being the holiday season, it hasn't been as welcome as the first winter rains usually are. It interfered with a number of parties, and even Santa Claus had to postpone his Christmas greeting.

But nature's growth welcomed it royally; almost leaped to meet it. A good soak is what the parched earth wants at this time of the year, nor do the short term showers meet requirements in any way. Seventy-two hours of steady rain, and grass, shrubs and trees begin to get it where it helps, at the roots.

Dull brown fields and meadows already are showing green, and the hills to the south and east—when one can see them through the downpour—have taken on the spring colors, the pines washed clean, and the brush putting out new leaves.

Up the valley, wherever farms are farms and not subdivisions, there is deep gratitude for the bountful rains. This will start things booming on the ranches. This will make peaches, apricots, apples and pears for the orchard trees. This will prepare the ground for planting and enrich the harvest. And no less interested is the gardener of flowers, right here in Carmel.

Take your oil skin and umbrella, being careful to put on galoshes, and stroll through your flowerbeds, looking for results. You will find—

But You do it. We haven't any galoshes and we have a darn, sniffy cold, and we never did like the rain, anyway it comes. If it don't let up pretty soon, we'll just quit being optimistic, and write what we really think about it.

People Talked About

I wonder if Mackenzie Gordon will remember a small apartment in the Cambridge, Ellis Avenue and 29th street, Chicago, where nearly forty years ago he would go sometimes and sing of an evening. I wonder if he remembers Blatchford Kavanaugh, the boy soprano, who had sung before all the kings and queens of Europe—and there were a lot of them then. And Harry Dimond, who in Lord Fauntleroy garb, looking like a little cherub, would make a violin sing. And pretty Harriet Hale, just beginning her stage career at the Carleton Club, playing Esmeralda, and such juvenile leads. And Elisabeth Root, big hearted and kindly, looking after all the young things. And an awkward, country lout—who was I.

The apartment had three very tiny rooms; its floor coverings were blue denim; a packing box, with a gay chintz skirt to hide its commonness, was a dressing table. On the wall were two water colors—or colored pen drawings, my contribution to the furnishings. One was of Joe Jefferson as Bob Acres.

Mackenzie Gordon was soloist then in a South Side church, where sometimes we others went to hear him. Yes, he could sing. I've never heard him since, oddly enough, for he has been a frequent visitor in Carmel for a great many years.

I wonder if Mackenzie Gordon knows what became of Harry Dimond, boy violinist, or Blatch Kavanaugh, boy soloist. Elizabeth Root is Mrs. Ike Spears now and lives in Hollywood, I think. Harriet Hale, married too, lives in one of the beach towns around Los Angeles. I'm here; so is Mackenzie Gordon.

* * * *

So is Frank Sheridan. He wants to ask Mackenzie Gordon to recall a special corner in the grill room of the old Lambs' Club of New York, with Frank Croxton, Frank Belcher and a few other genial souls sitting around, singing Scotch ballads to make one's heart break. That, says Frank Sheridan, was a dozen years ago, and easier, perhaps, to recall than the last of the eighties.

* * * *

R. Clarkson Colman had the rather unique honor of having one of his paintings "unveiled," with ceremonial speeches and all that, at the La Jolla Yacht club recently. Also, and more satisfying, he received a check for $1500 for the canvas.

"The Jeweled Sea—La Jolla"—is the name of the painting. Stephen Chalmers, author of a score of novels, made the principal speech at the unveiling. He said of Colman:

"R. Clarkson Colman, lover of the sea, expresses poems through the medium of deftly handled pigments, poems that come to his mind as he sits in his studio window overlooking the ocean studying the myriad changes of movement, of light and shade and hue in the sea which has been his life study. It is not generally known that Colman is a poet and a writer of scenarios, as well as a painter of the heart of the ocean, and I am not sure whether he is a poet expressing the painting through the medium of words or a painter expressing a poem through his pigments. However, it is interesting to know that this man, who so ably catches and preserves for us on his canvasses the beauty and lure of the sea, its swelling surges of ebbing tide, rocks, sea-swept and dark, its cliffs of tawny yellow light bathed in evening light and its waters of amber, blue and jade, was born in Elgin, Ill., and never saw the sea until he was 21 years old. What must it have meant to this painter whose whole artistic ambition was changed upon that instant and became fixed on that momentous day in 1903 when the jewel-ed bosom of the Gulf of Mexico spread before his gaze."

A story by James Hopper is in the thirteenth annual issue of Edward O'Brien's anthology, "The Best Short Stories of 1926." And it isn't the first time Jimmie has been in the list. He isn't a prolific writer, but he does hit high with many of his stories.

In this anthology, he is in company of Owen Wester, Ernest Hemmingway, Sherwood Anderson, Joseph Hergesheimer, Dubose Hayward, Frank Shay, and Rose Wilder Lane.

Hopper is one of Carmel's pioneers among the artists and writers, and although he is away in New York or Europe a part of every year, his home and his family are here, and much of his best work has been done in Carmel. Twenty years ago he and Frederick R. Bechdolt, collaborating, wrote "9009" in the cabin on Camino Real now known as the Old Cabin Tea Room. The book, based upon the escape from prison and ultimate killing of the convict, Tracy, had a wide sale. Other books by Hopper are "Caybigan," "Goodie," "The Freshman," and "What Happened in the Night."

The Black Sheep

Here some poems of Dora Hagemeyer, in a slender sheaf, "Swords of the Grass" its title. Delicately spun, they reflect a life quiet as a clear pool into which strong unseen currents pour. The moods are fragile; sometimes delicately satirical; occasionally laughter-shaken with a healthy sense of the absurd.

The workmanship is sensitively wrought; music and rhythm grateful to read aloud, with slow cadence. Occasionally there is a reticence which reaches superb height.

A subjective contribution such as this serves literature, not primarily, AS SUCH, but rather as a record of the life of the human spirit which, caught as it is in the cage of daily living, must make itself poems in which its flight shall be free, subtle, and limitless.

A poem is a frail thing. Half its virtue is in the right reading of it. I quote, therefore, and commit to the casual reading of the newspaper page, not one of the most delicately luminous of this group, but the handy.

FOLIAGE

O give me sea and yellow fields to sing to!
I am closed in and suffocate with trees.
Let my eyes rest upon the earth's curve only.
I have grown tired of things as near as these.

Set me my foot upon the forest border,
Reach me the sky and let the sunlight flow.
With what finality I'll leave this garden,
Place my cool hand upon a hill and go!

REM, HOW COULD YOU? Ah, you must have been the victim of the Recapitulation Theory, which has it that the child must pass through all the stages of race development which preceded our own. And your corollary is, that this includes thick slapstick farce. Dear Rem, are you so certain that the children don't skip some of the less relevant early phases? Or have you really seen all of us wearing noserings at some time or other?

I submit that NONE, man, woman or child, in your audience, found that sort of show really funny. It was essentially UN-FUNNY. (The sad sea-waves are at their very saddest right ferninst the amusement pier.) I saw one child, bury his head in his mother's lap when Punch began his heavy work, and hide there, quivering and terrified through a whole act.

Of course your show was greatly interesting to the grown-up as a picture of the sort of the thing that amused our ancestors,—or to students of early English drama, psycho-analysis, or the History of the Theory of Laughter. But it was fundamentaly unchildlike, — awful to an almost distinguished degree.

Dear Rem, forgive me for scolding. They say you do enchanting things sometimes. Perhaps you did this just to provide a little contrast in the composition?

THE DIAL once confidently supposed itself to be the last word in American literary culture. (But that, of course, was in the effete east!) Now a visitor to Carmel describes it as "a town where the reading of the Dial is done by the real estate agents. For the intellectual hierarchies next above, there is practically nothing left good enough to read but their own manuscripts!"

The visitor may have been twitting us. Yet in the last week we have heard before various hearthfires, enough good unpublished manuscripts read by their authors to start well on its way a periodical of distinguished caliber. If there is not yet such a publication on the Pacific coast, as a channel for the most vital and enduring elements of California life and culture, the time is certainly, and impatiently, ready for it.

This Pacific coast has a life-tendency, a characteristic quality, all its own, and not at all to be expressed in terms of New York City, —whose most brilliant publications derive their nourishment from European influences, rather than from the Orient, as we do. The movement of the significant culture of our century is, certainly, toward the west. Life in these United States of America has such variety of character, that it is absurd to assume any point as THE center from which the culture of the period radiates. New York City eventually becomes merely ONE of many such regions. The cradle of any civilization, Spengler forcefully makes us aware, also becomes its grave. It must move on.

Surely a part of the westerner's pride in his West lies in his perhaps unconscious knowledge that his is, geographically, the logical and strategic locus for the leadership of the future.

For this and many other reasons the poetry magazines (one of them, Westward, issuing volume 1, number 1, this month) The Overland Monthly, even the occasional barbaric yawps which are healthy and

The communication which follows, addressed by S. F. B. Morse, President of the Del Monte Properties Co., to the Peninsula Herald, and reprinted from that paper, is of interest to everyone on the Monterey Peninsula, and is a promise as well as a defense of what has been done by the company in the past. It reads:

Editor, Monterey Herald,
Monterey, California.
Dear Sir:

In your editorial column of the 15th instant, I noted your comment on the 17-Mile Drive.

It is obvious to me that you are not thoroughly familiar with what is taking place at Cypress Point, and with the thought that some of your readers may also lack knowledge of the situation, I will attempt to elucidate.

The Del Monte company is perhaps more cognizant of the value of preserving the natural beauty spots of the Monterey Peninsula than any other one individual or company. (In naming the Del Monte company, I embrace its predecessor, the Pacific Improvement company, as the management has been the same for a period of more than twelve years.)

At the time the present management took charge of the Pacific Improvement company, what is now the Pebble Beach golf course was laid out tentatively in a subdivision of fifty-foot lots.

It was contemplated to make the golf course an addition to the City of Carmel.

What has been done to permanently maintain this beautiful area virtually as a great park is too well known to require comment.

The open area lying between Moss Beach and Cypress Point along the Seventeen-Mile Drive has in a similar way been permanently established so that it cannot be built upon or its natural beauty destroyed.

Under the agreement with the Monterey Peninsula Country Club, this property can never be used for anything but a golf course or similar recreational purposes.

I think any intelligent person will agree that a well constructed golf course adds materially to the natural beauty of an area of this sort.

Appreciating the great importance of Cypress Point to the Monterey Peninsula, this particular area was withheld from market even though extraordinary sums of money were offered for building sites in that region.

It occurred to us that a particularly happy solution of the situation had presented itself in again dedicating an important part of the peninsula virtually as a park area, by making of it a golf course.

Any person familiar with values of residential property on the water front, of which there is very little left, will realize that the owners of Cypress Point in selling that area to the Cypress Point Golf Club at $1,000.00 an acre, probably sold it at one-tenth of what could have been realized for it in building sites.

This area is dedicated, like the others, for golf and recreational purposes. If it is used for other purposes, it reverts to the Del Monte company.

The routing of the Seventeen-Drive has been given the most careful and thorough study.

It is easy to form an erroneous opinion before a project of this sort is completed.

The new road, when entirely completed, will run along the edge of Moss Beach closer to the water than the old Seventeen-Mile Drive, will run out to the water where the Ostrich Tree used to stand, from there down to approximately the location of the Ram's Horn Tree and from there instead of circling around the baren portion of Cypress Point, will turn back and swing through the Cypress trees out again to the point which commands such a beautiful view of the shore line towards Carmel Bay. After that the road remains unchanged.

By going out to the point where The routing of the Drive at the present time has been partly over the old roads and partly over the new roads.
the Ostrich Tree used to stand, a new and very inspiring view is added to the many along the Drive.

View Preserved

No particularly alluring view is sacrificed in the change, and the beautiful view down towards Carmel Bay is preserved.

As a matter of fact, in the opinion of all the intelligent people who have studied the situation, the Drive is more beautiful then ever.

It occurs to the writer that if other property owners on the peninsula will treat the development of their property with equal care, and if the city of Monterey will handle its building and development projects as carefully as this company has done, that the Monterey Peninsula will be a charming place indeed even though each day sees the construction of buildings that are woefully inharmonious with the traditions of the region, and in some instances, little less than atrocities.

Yours very truly,

S. F. B. MORSE.
President Del Monte Properties Company.

DID THE KIDDIES HAVE A GOOD TIME AT PARTY?

Grimy faces, freckled and tan faces, nice little girls and teasing little boys, poking, jostling, and squirming, but all happy and full of awe, because a surprise was coming—that's the scene of the Christmas party given for the children of the peninsula by the Rotary, Exchange and Kiwanis clubs and the theatre management on Monday at the Golden State Theatre. There were eighteen hundred children there, some as early as nine in the morning, and by opening time the traffic needed some handling. Dave Bolton, manager of the theatre, kept the crowd happy and orderly and moving along, and finally got them all satisfactorily seated.

The show kept them all laughing. From the opening address of welcome by Emmett McMenamin to the last bag of candy tossed from the tree it was a good-will party. The program was opened by a snow white fairy, who was really little Billy McConnell, well known for her dainty dances. Then Santa came along, evidently from a cold country, because his red suit was all snow flecked. Santa was Frank Gloeckner, and somewhere in his family tree must have been a St. Nicholas, because he knew so well how to be a Santa.

He told the story of the first Christmas in the sort of a big round voice Santa surely has, a real bed-time-story voice, that makes little boys and girls lay down their toys and stop to listen. Many of the children had heard it before, but Santa knew that some little children were hearing it for the first time. Then they sang, and all the words were flashed on the screen. They sang "Jingle Bells," and other gay old Christmas songs, led by Fenton Foster, who had an inspiration when he suggested that they sing "Barney Google." Mr. Hegbom at the organ helped a lot.

Then the fun began. There were games played on the stage to the uproarious yells of joy from the audience. There were prizes awarded for the best winner of all obstacles, and every one played to win that morning.

Then good old Felix came along on the screen to be in on such a great occasion. Can't you see Felix, wagging that tail of his until it formed a beautiful Mirge "M" to hang "Merry Christmas" on as he winked a wise eye at the kids?

It presented a grave problem to Traffic Officer Trenner when the party was over and all those excited children were on their way out, but he accomplished it without mishap. All got safely, home, with packages in their arms, and a lot of popcorn in their tummies, and a big thrill in their hearts. They believe in a Santa, and they will, as long as there are Service clubs on the peninsula.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hooper, whose Carmel house has been the scene of many family reunions, entertained at a Christmas dinner at their home in San Francisco. Among the guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis O'Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Moore of San Jose, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pardow, Miss Biddy O'Sullivan of London, Mr. Terrence O'Sullivan, Mr. Pardow Hooper, Mr. Joseph Hooper, Jr., Mr. George Hooper, Master Dion and Master Hooper O'Sullivan.

Confessions of a Y-man With the A.E.F. in France

By Perry Newberry

XX.

We knew now that the Huns were in full retreat, and that the days of the war were numbered. At the last bivouac, I had bet a box of cigars, the limit of army extravagance, that the war would be over within a week. That gave me until midnight of November 8 to win. As I watched this mighty effort of America and France to catch and crush the Hun, I felt certain of winning.

We were bivouaced that night close to the little village of Verpel, two days before in German hands, and to us came the strangest order of our experience in the war. The First aBttalion was to park its guns, billet its men in Verpel, and turn over all its livestock to the Second Battalion, which was to continue the hot pursuit. We listened to that order read, and officers and men stood dumfounded. Lose half of our regiment here in the last days of the war? Place the whole First Battalion on the retired list, and out of participation in the immediate victory?

There may have been men in that battalion who rejoiced at the surety of life and whole skins that the order gave, but the depression that settled upon the outfit was like a heavy fog. I risked getting the piano from hiding in Bill's wagon, trying to cheer things up a bit, but nothing could counteract that command. Recklessly, I offered to bet cigars in unlimited quantities that the war would be won and over before midnight Friday, the eighth, and was taken up so heavily by pessimistic boys that I faced bankruptcy unless luck was with me.

One thing I could do, to lessen the gloom of those left in Verpel. A truckload of supplies, brought up from Les Islettes where, even yet, a Y warehouse stored quantities of cigarettes and candies, would help them forget this disappointment, so I went to find Captain Ewell and beg for transportation. As I came to the officers' quarter, I heard my name called cautiously, and stepping inside the tent, got a gruff whisper,

"Where's Bob Ewell?"

It was dark in there, but I could see the vague figure of a man. I questioned,

"Who is it?"

"Murphy. I'm back. Where's the captain?"

"Thank God youre here!" I grabbed his hand, and shook it. "Dont know where the captain is—was hunting him myself. What can I do for you, Murph?"

"Find him. Find Lieutenant Bruns, and get a uniform off him; I'm a wreck, and he's near my size. Then get me a razor and stuff for a shave. Where's regimental P.C.?"

"In the village, and the Colonel's there. I'll be back."

I sent Bruns to Murphy first, then found a shaving kit and hurried it to him. When he lit a candle, I saw as tough a looking tramp, bewhiskered and blear eyed, clothed in muddied rags, as an officer could ever get to be. Murphy, ordinarily, was something of a dandy; now he was a sight.

Away I hustled again, this time to the kitchen for food and coffee. In clean uniform and shaved, Murphy sat on a roll in the tent, gulped food and drink, and told his story. He'd never got further on his way to Nice than Paris, and had been drunk almost from the hour of his arrival there. Of course the telegram of recall had never reached him, though had it gone to Paris, it could never have found Murphy, where he hung out. It had been a drunken debauch, and he woke up from it to learn of this second battle of the Argonne, and the division's participation in it.

"And it's now to see the Colonel," he said, getting to his feet in a pair of Brun's boots. "Hope he doesn't order me shot."

"What'll you tell him?" from Bruns.

"Oh hell! What can I tell but the truth?"

Captain Ewell, coming up, met him as Murphy stepped from his tent. The junior saluted. Captain Ewell answered it, then clasped his hand and pumped it hard. Murphy grinned weakly, and said,

"I won't keep the Colonel waiting, Bob. Don't want him to hear from anyone else that I'm back. See you later." And Murphy, shoulders braced, chin up, marched off toward the picket line for a mount.

What happened at regimental P. C.? Murph told me later that night. Colonel MacCleave listened to his report, then said,

"Get back on your job now, Lieutenant."

Which left things pretty much up in the air. It would have cleared matters had the words followed a hearty, healthy rating. Even if Murph had been told to report for service under arrest, it would have been the expected. But the curt order had us all guessing. We knew that Murphy was invaluable to the regiment right now; he could get rations and ammunition when anyone else would fail; but was his technical desertion "in the face of the enemy" to be overlooked and forgotten, or was it merely shelved until it could be taken up under quieter conditions?

Each day our guns moved forward, and each day the piano was loaded into Bill's wagon with that degree of secresy which allowed two responsible officers the "out" that they did not see it loaded, and our music followed the guns. Everyone in the regiment knew that we were lugging a piano in the wake of the fleeing Hun, for it was the center of activities at the echelon every evening; but with orders out that only the absolute necessities of ammunition and rations should be carried, its fate was but a matter of time.

Upon our front the war had become a series of rear guard actions with an enemy that was making a swift yet masterly retreat. Our batteries hammered at his heels as he fled toward the Meuse. On November 4, we drove him from La Besace, and with his machineguns still sending a rain of bullets through the streets, we moved regimental P. C. into the town. And here next morning, in an orchard at the edge of the village, on a hill that over-

Captain Martin, Regimental Adjutant, had come to me. "Newberry," he said, "we are leaving all but emergency rations. Shall it be music or coffee for the boys?"

"Coffee," promptly. "The piano will be salvaged here."

"Thank you." That was the nearest I had to a direct order in the war.

It was raining, so we put the piano under an apple tree, and covered it with a tarpaulin; and we looked back at it regretfully as we swung into the road.

RAIN MAKES FIREPLACE GLOW CHEERFULLY

Umbrellas and overshoes, heavy coats and last winter's hats were in order for Christmas. From Sunday until Tuesday, it rained and blew and froze one half to death, and the fireplace felt mighty good.

Brave sportsmen who were determined to get their week-end of fishing and hunting in the Big Sur section came home with stories of the storm instead of game. They tell of a regular gale that carried small trees and branches of bigger ones across the roads, and in one place there was a complete washout.

At the Cooper ranch the rain gauge showed 3.04 inches within a period of 30 hours, starting Saturday morning and ending at noon on Sunday. The washout up the Big Sur way is about one and one-half miles this side of Nottley's Landing but motorists need have no difficulty in getting around it. All the rest of the road is in good condition, and not so slippery that anyone need be afraid to drive it in spite of the remaining dampness.

Nearly an inch fell on the peninsula during the storm, according to the Pacific Grove station of the Southern Pacific, where the gauge recorded precipitation of .95 inch. This brings the total up to 4.13 inches, which is however still behind the figure for last year, which was 5.92 at this time.

To celebrate the end of the storm, and to promise a prosperous New Year for us all, a full grown rainbow arched across the sky Tuesday morning at about nine, but who believes in signs? It continued to rain all day.

symptomatic bits of self-expression, ought to lead on to more representative and enduring utterance.

The creative and spiritually energetic factors in Californian life are remarkable in their separate parts. An organizing leadership, such as a superlatively edited periodical on the Pacific coast might bring about, could center and integrate these factors toward the building of that New Race of which we in California hear so much. Leadership by way of an adequate channel for expression and intercommunication of the isolated spirits in this part of the world, is a next vast necessity.

BECOMES PRESIDENT OF HOTEL MEN'S ASSOCIATION

In order to bring harmony to opposing factions, Mayor John B. Jordan was prevailed upon last week to accept the presidency of the California Northern Hotel Association at their annual meeting in San Francisco.

Mayor Jordan has been an office holder in the association for the past fifteen years and was a vice-president of the body when elected.

The association's membership comprises 115 hosteiries and a split in the ranks was threatened unless a candidate acceptable to both factions was elected. Mayor Jordan's prominence throughout the state and his leadership in public affairs made him an agreeable candidate.

The association perfected plans to back a drive by the San Francisco citizen's committee to bring the Democratic National convention to San Francisco.

Here's new life, new color for your living room

This lamp really lights a room

The money you spend for one of these lamps does more to improve a room than the same money spent for other furnishings.

For the abundance of soft colorful light makes an "interior" seem lovelier. It's just like redecorating the whole room.

These floor and table lamps are different from any other lamp. There is a reflector under the silk shade that diffuses or scatters the light. This is the new principle of design that combines beauty with good lighting and eliminates harmful gloom and glare. Such lighting is kind to your family's eyes.

The lamps have a base finished in silver or gold and there is a selection of four silk shades. You can see them at our office.
